

Girls and Autism:

What's the difference?

Sarah Hendrickx

Monday 25th Sept

7-9pm at Forres school

For many years, autism was considered as predominantly a male condition, with few women diagnosed. More recently, there has been a realisation that autistic females exist in much greater numbers than previously thought, partly through historical bias and also because some girls and women process and present the autistic profile differently.

Sarah will discuss how girls meet the diagnostic criteria for autism and why they get missed. As a late diagnosed autistic adult herself who works in the field of autism, she shares both personal and professional insights into the world of autistic girls and how to support them.
